

Surgery/Recovery update

Hello Friends! I am more than halfway through recovery from surgery — past the 3 week mark of expected 6 week recovery! My surgery was successful. The surgeon was super excited that my transplanted kidney wasn't anywhere near where the tumor was — which was the biggest risk: that the kidney or its connectors could be damaged during surgery. The tumor was benign as expected. All that's left is for me to recover.

Meanwhile, three years ago at work we had a rash of people getting married and having babies. Now we're having a rash of people getting sick and having surgeries. We liked the former better. Please pray for healing and recovering, for no more people to have serious health issues, and also for additional (healthy 😊) IT people to join our team.

“I've come to church every Sunday and listened to the preaching without understanding it well. I figured God must be difficult to understand. But everything you read today is very clear to me.”

- church member after she heard newly translated Matthew 7:15-20 (about true and false prophets) read in a Sunday morning church service in her own language

Coolest Scripture Celebration Introduction ever

Wycliffe held its Spring Scripture Celebration this month. You can watch the recording here: <https://www.wycliffe.org/celebrate>. One of our board members from the organization “Spoken Gospel” performed a spoken piece at the beginning: the first four and a half minutes of the video. The rest of the celebration is probably good too, but the first 4 ½ minutes you need to watch.

Prayer

- Praise God for kidney being in a good place (out of harm's way), for no cancer, and for recovery so far.
- Pray for a low blood pressure issue I'm having. It wasn't happening before surgery but medical people don't see a clear connection to surgery. I'm having some tests done.
- Praise God that I'm able to work a few hours a week and that work has been relatively quiet — i.e., me being out for an extended time wasn't the enormous burden on my colleagues that I'd feared.
